CHRISTIANE ADLUNG

Sommerrauschen / Summer Murmurs

A Novel, ca. 272 pages
Spring 2026

Christiane Adlung lives in Hanover as a freelance author after many years in Nice, southern France. She studied art history, architecture, and interior design. Under her pseudonym Joséphine Nicolas, she has published two historical novels with DuMont: "Days with Gatsby" (2021) and "The House on the Seashore" (2023).

"A thoughtful approach to everything in the past that inevitably shapes a life"
Lisa Bierbauer, ELLE

"With great care, Christiane Adlung attends to the longings, the disappointed hopes, and above all the countless fears that move her characters [...] a reflective, complex, well-constructed story – one you can even read in autumn and winter [...] a psychologically precise story about guilt, fear, and unspoken versions of a life."

Rainer Moritz, DEUTSCHLANDFUNK KULTUR

"It is a book that gives you the courage to finally put the unspeakable into words [...] Christiane Adlung intertwines intricate descriptions of nature with the human psyche; architecture with the thoughts and feelings of her characters." Andrea Schwyzer, NDR KULTUR

A delicate yet powerful novel about seemingly endless, shimmering summers in France and a friendship that ended abruptly

About a great loss and conflicting feelings between two women who meet again after decades

Days in Backlight

Five houses on stilts—the summer quarters of a handful of families in Médoc. Since childhood, Judith has spent every August here. Surfing in the Atlantic, swimming in the lake, temporary tattoos on sun-tanned skin. And always by Judith's side back then: her little sister Lola and Natascha, the girl from the house next door. Years later, Judith, now a successful sculptor, lives alone with her husband Robert and their twin daughters in house at the corner. Only Oda, Judith's eccentric mother, returns here as well after the death of her father. But even though the house is filled with people again, the painful gaps in Judith's life are most evident here.

When the vacant neighbouring house is put up for sale, Robert is immediately interested. For Judith, however, these four walls and their stories awaken deep-seated memories. And when Natascha suddenly shows up with her husband Simon, all the feelings Judith has been trying to suppress since that summer forty years ago suddenly come flooding back.

"Five, Six, Seven, Eight (...) is also a true Arenz novel. Refined, authentic and always with that loving gaze upon people and their little weaknesses and insecurities. The Rhythm of Life

Anton, sixty years old, is a tap dancer. Yes, he's no longer as quick as he once was, but with his experience and expressive power he still – for now – outdances them all. So who could possibly challenge him for the position of choreographer at a theatre?

But the new artistic director sees things differently – and hires, of all people, Emma, Anton's daughter. Anton feels hurt, angry, sad, and at the same time proud of his daughter. But he can't show her any of it.

The rejection brings something to the surface that he can no longer push aside: the feeling of growing older. Suddenly he senses his own finiteness and asks himself whether he has lived his life the right way. A question that leads him back to thoughts of a great love from long ago. Jo had simply vanished without a trace. Would he have lived a better life with her?

It is Emma who picks up Jo's trail. With her, he travels to Ireland. Old conflicts between father and daughter resurface. For Anton, it becomes a journey back to himself, and he understands: nothing is over until it's over. Until then, life is meant to be lived.

SWR BESTENLISTE April 2026

"Subtly unfolding across three different time periods, Andreas Schäfer explores some of art's most enduring themes: illusion and deception, self-knowledge and memory—the relationship between art and life. Even now, this material still yields something entirely new." SWR Bestenliste

"The way Schäfer gives his masterfully crafted story an unexpected twist in the second act and resolves it all in the final act without a word too many: a triumph of cinematic storytelling!" Silvi Feist, EMOTION

"Final Act is compelling proof of what makes this 56-year-old Berlin author so exceptional in contemporary German-language literature [...]: his remarkable ability to create atmosphere through his depiction of interiors." Oliver Pfohlmann, SWR Kultur – Lesenswert Kritik

Andreas Schäfer tells masterfully and sensitively about the freedom to decide how to live

A novel about the ghosts of the past seeking new places in our lives

About the All-Encompassing Power of Art

London, 2005: After many years in film, actress Dora is back on the theatre stage – in her early forties, she can look back on a successful career. When she meets the painter Victor in a bar after the premiere, she is fascinated: who is this man who has never heard of her? Dora sees this encounter as a chance to hide: from her mother, who constantly calls from Frankfurt, from her agent, who wants to convince her to take on different roles, and perhaps also from her unpleasant colleague, who repeatedly tests her limits. After spending a few weeks together, Dora decides that Victor should paint her – but when she sees the painting, the ground is pulled from under her feet and long-forgotten memories return. What does Dora think she recognizes in the picture?

"Final Act" masterfully depicts the intertwining of life and art and sensitively tells the story of a liberation that changes everything.

"Johanna Sebauer proves with her text that literature can be entertaining and funny yet meaningful." JURY, BACHMANN COMPETITION

"A very funny, fast satire on current outrage culture, runaway debates, and polarization." DER STANDARD

"At the Bachmann Prize two years ago, listeners and judges were largely united in their praise for Johanna Sebauer, whose text transforms a pickled vegetable into a full-blown media spectacle in the height of summer." WELT AM SONNTAG

"A riotously funny analysis of our contemporary culture of outrage."
Nicole Abraham, HR2-KULTUR

"Sebauer's text is, first of all, extremely funny; secondly, it uses satire to expose an entire array of the less appealing mechanisms at work in the present day. [...] Nikolaus Heidelberg's affectionate yet acerbic illustrations reinforce the strengths of Johanna Sebauer's small but brilliantly comic morality tale."

Christoph Schröder, SWR Kultur – lesenswert Kritik

Illustrated by Nikolaus Heidelberg

What a Rotten Little Gherkin!

Summer in the city's newspaper editorial offices. A truly important editor-in-chief prepares his breakfast roll. Side dish: crunchy gherkins. As he bites into it, vinegar water squirts straight into his eye. The uproar is huge; the editor-in-chief is on the verge of blindness! The incident causes a stir: the mishap becomes a column, then a topic for letters to the editor, interviews, and finally a public debate. Gherkins are banned, protests form, and the editorial team splits into factions.

With biting irony, Johanna Sebauer, comments on today's culture of outrage - brilliantly illustrated by Nikolaus Heidelberg.

An Encounter Like No Other On Trying to Be Friends With Yourself

Hendrik Popom imagined his late twenties would be different. Nothing seems to be going right for him. He sits out his time at his agency job, and things with his girlfriend have been better. Then suddenly there is this man – Popóm. He is almost twice his age, yet Hendrik knows: this man is me.

Hesitantly, the two approach each other. Their relationship is full of riddles, affection and resistance. Sometimes they meet like brothers, sometimes like rivals, then again like mirror images that cannot bear each other. The more Hendrik neglects his own life and clings to Popóm, the more Popóm withdraws. In the company of his other self, Hendrik hopes to find to find stability and safety from the small and large dramas that can befall anyone. When he confides in a colleague, he realizes that the price of withdrawing from life is too high.

A story about the longing for closeness in a time of isolation, about letting go and searching for a life that is truly one's own.

KAROSH TAHA

Gulistan

A Novel, 160 pages

August 2026

English sample available

Longlisted for the German Book Prize 2026

Selected by New Books in German

Powerfully, Karosh Taha tells of what war, hatred, and unfreedom mean. Linguistically unique — tender and brutal at once — multi-voiced, lyrical, urgent

„The more one surrenders to the experience of this book, immersing oneself in its fractured syntax and exposed metaphors, the less it feels like reading in the conventional sense. Instead, one increasingly gains the impression of entering a state: this, then, is what happens to the human mind under extreme conditions.“ SÜDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG

“A bold, unforgettable novel, Gulistan confirms Taha as one of the most original voices in contemporary German-language literature.”

NEW BOOKS IN GERMAN

»[„Gulistan“] shows what literature is capable of. (...)

It is hard to find another example of how (entirely justified) panic and dire need could be depicted so strikingly and disturbingly on mere patient, smooth, naturally silent pages of paper.«

Judith von Sternburg, FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU

Karosh Taha was born in 1987 in Zaxo, Kurdistan. As a child, she fled with her family from Saddam Hussein's dictatorship to Germany. She studied English and History at the University of Duisburg-Essen and also studied English Literature in Kansas, USA. After Description of a Crab Migration and In the Belly of the Queen, Gulistan is her third novel. For her work she was awarded the following prizes and scholarships: Advancement Award of the State of NRW; LCB Scholarship (Literarisches Colloquium Berlin); Heinrich Heine Scholarship, Work Grant from the Kunststiftung NRW; Hohenems Literature Prize, Scholarship from the German Literature Fund, Rolf Dieter Brinkmann Scholarship, Residency scholarship from the Goethe-Institut in Marseille and Prague, Alfred Döblin Medal, Villa Aurora scholarship, Los Angeles. Longlisted for the German Book Prize 2026.

“I did not drag the country into war. The country dragged me into war.”

Gulistan lives with her husband, Çiya, in a country that is hostile to them—for their language, their way of thinking, their very existence. Under the dictatorial regime of Saddam Hussein, they are persecuted as Kurds. When Çiya disappears, Gulistan sets out to search for him. Nothing can break her resolve to find her beloved again, even as she is repeatedly confronted with the extent of her own powerlessness. At last she encounters Çiya again at a gathering, amid a crowd of people—wearing the dictator's uniform, as his double. Gulistan is arrested and gradually loses her mind, yet her powers of resistance grow ever stronger—not only when she learns that she is pregnant.

How can one not succumb to madness in the face of a dictatorship that twists truths, takes everything from people, and knows no language but violence?

Karosh Taha writes about fear in the streets, the cruelty of a paranoid system, and resistance through storytelling—polyphonic, lyrical, compressed.

She wonders whether jumping from the window might be the solution to her problems. So Olga decides to go on a collision course with life: but how do you learn something that seems to work intuitively for everyone else?

Tutto Bene

A Novel, 288 pages
July 2026

Laura Wagner was born in Bavaria in 1990. She worked in Berlin's cultural scene for almost 10 years, among other places at the Berlin State Ballet and at the State Opera Unter den Linden. She wrote the book "Wo Kraut und Rüben wachsen" about her brief personal experiment with country life on her grandmother's farm in the Upper Palatinate. She then headed the Marketing and Communications department at the National Theatre Mannheim. "Tutto bene" is her debut novel.

Emma is struggling: with her body, the past, life. But in a Kreuzberg corner shop she finds people who give her support.

A fast-paced debut novel about love, friendship, and the courage to break out of old patterns

Laura Wagner goes where it hurts, and still tells the story with great tenderness

"Laura Wagner's debut shines with compelling characters, a distinctive voice, and a wonderful eye for detail."

Anna-Lena Weber, STRAUBINGER TAGBLATT

"A debut as candid and unvarnished as Berlin itself."

Alexandra Pasi and Lena Langecker, MYSELF MAGAZIN

"An entertaining novel full of charm, with a thoroughly endearing protagonist."

Angelo Algieri, OSTDEUTSCHE ALLGEMEINE

„As super as it can be“

Mars, Snickers, Happy Cherries – when Emma restocks the corner-shop shelves, she sees only one thing: calories. She dropped out of university, just as she dropped contact with her father, who is probably somewhere sleeping off his latest binge on a park bench. And Emma, too, can barely get through an evening without a Müller-Thurgau; the mug under the counter helps her forget. Everything's tutto bene, right? Nope. But then, all of a sudden, there's Ingrid: fifteen, cheeky as hell, and newly a student intern at the corner shop. It's not only Udo – who crawls out from behind his gaming computer solely for chocolate and energy drinks – who takes an instant liking to the know-it-all teenager. Emma, too, soon lets Ingrid into her heart without thinking. Without thinking – because now she really has to face her problems, and they escalate exponentially when she meets the sailor who is actually called Leo. He wants what she has avoided for years: a relationship, with everything that comes with it. But Emma doesn't even dare to get a tattoo – so how is she supposed to commit to something that big? Opening up to someone even a crack is hard enough.

Selected by New Book in German Spring 2026

"Katrin Zipse's debut novel is an atmospheric, finely detailed novel about silence, survival, and the slow, risky work of learning to belong again. (...) With its strong historical hook, careful psychological insight, and vivid sense of place, 'Land of Moss' should appeal to English-language readers of post-war women's stories and quietly suspenseful rural fiction. It's a novel about departure and arrival, and about the moment a new language stops being noise and becomes, cautiously, a way back to life." NEW BOOKS IN GERMAN

"Land of Moss is a wonderfully moving book, a hopeful one as well — a quiet, memorable novel that engages with the major themes of uprootedness, intercultural understanding, and integration with confident tone and striking originality in content. That home is not a place but a decision becomes clear in the final lines, without ever being stated explicitly. That, perhaps, is the most beautiful thing about Mossland — and maybe the most Icelandic as well: that so much becomes evident without being forced into a cliché. Katrin Zipse is a storyteller of the unspoken."

Oliver Jungen – FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG

Based on a true story: After World War II, German women follow the call of Icelandic farmers and work on their farms.

A powerful novel about the strength of language, nature, and community

When Elsa arrives in Iceland in the summer of 1949, she is one of many. Nearly three hundred young women from Germany have answered the call of the Icelandic Farmers' Party to work for a year on Icelandic farms.

The farmers hope for new workers and potential brides, as many locals have moved to the cities. Most of the women from Germany do not speak the language and often have nothing to lose.

Elsa, too, remains silent. She is not here to stay; she is mourning her friend Sola, and at first, she cannot communicate with the farming family. Yet, between the turf house, glowing meadows, and endless sea, a way of living together emerges that Elsa eventually cannot keep at bay.

Her mere presence changes the dynamics on the farm—especially among the farmers' sons. There are expectations, both spoken and unspoken. And then there is the family's missing daughter, whom no one talks about, but who becomes increasingly important to Elsa ...

Katrin Zipse tells, with sensitivity and vividness, through a nearly forgotten piece of history, what it means to find a new language.

#1 Krimi Bestenliste June 2026

Six-time winner of the German Crime Prize

„Without a doubt, the best crime novel of the year.”

Elmar Krekeler, WELT AM SONNTAG

“Finally: the great Cum-Ex novel – close-up and unvarnished. With great finesse, Bottini blends fact with fiction and tells the story of the biggest financial crime of recent years.”
Krimi Bestenliste Platz 1 (The Jury)

Kolja Mensing, DEUTSCHLANDFUNK KULTUR Lesart

“In The Sum of All Things Bottini tells of a world in which morality has become nothing more than an empty phrase. [...] He writes with understanding and empathy, and a healthy dose of melancholy [...], Bottini blends fact and fiction with the greatest narrative skill. He succeeds – and this is the highest art of storytelling – in making the complex, cross-border tax fraud understandable without letting these explanations get in the way of the momentum of a plot unfolding with breathless immediacy.”
Marcus Munterfering, DER SPIEGEL online

“The Cum-Ex scandal as material for a crime novel? If anyone can pull it off, it’s Frankfurt-based Oliver Bottini.”

Maria Wiesner, FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG

On the Trail of Those Who Defrauded the State of Millions

Oliver Bottini was born in 1965. He has received numerous awards for his novels, including the Radio Bremen Crime Prize, the Berlin “Krimifuchs”, the Stuttgart Crime Prize, and six times the German Crime Prize, most recently in 2022 for “Einmal noch sterben.”

Other books published by DuMont include “Der kalte Traum” (2012), “Ein paar Tage Licht” (2014),— filmed by ARTE/ZDF as “Algiers Confidential”—, “Der Tod in den stillen Winkeln des Lebens” (2017), as well as the crime novels about Freiburg detective Louise Boni.

Spring 2018: In Duisburg, a man shoots himself in the early hours of the morning; in London, another is killed by a mysterious car; on Capri, everyone is talking about murder, but neither a body nor blood can be found at the scene of the crime. This cannot be a coincidence, as Frankfurt police officer Vera Berg knows. Mourning her late husband Zaid, she travels to Capri in search of answers. What was he hiding from her? Was Erik, her husband's long-time friend and colleague, not murdered in his villa after all? And if not, where is he? And where is her daughter, who simply disappeared after her father's death?

Zaid, Freddy and Erik are university friends who wanted to make big money and whose stock transactions operate in the all-too-popular grey area – until a prosecutor takes notice of them and everything spirals out of control.

Oliver Bottini masterfully recounts what unbridled greed can lead to: politically explosive and highly suspenseful.

PETRA HARTLIEB

Buberlpartie

A Crime Novel,
ca. 400 pages

August 2026

As gripping as it is highly topical—In her second case, Alma investigates in the milieu of the New Right

With sharp insight, Petra Hartlieb once again takes on Austrian politics

“With Buberlpartie, she has written a political thriller that also reads as a state-of-the-nation portrait of Austrian democracy.” Imogena Doderer, ORF ZIB

“Rich in Viennese local colour and allusions to realpolitik.” Carmen Baumgartner-Pötz, TIROLER TAGESZEITUNG

“Bookshop owner Hartlieb [...] takes Austria’s domestic politics to task.” Kerstin Wassermann, KRONEN ZEITUNG

An Attack? A Right-Wing Conspiracy? Secret Meetings at the Chancellery?

Petra Hartlieb was born in Munich in 1967 and grew up in Upper Austria. She studied psychology and history and then worked as a press officer and literary critic in Vienna and Hamburg. In 2004 she took over a traditional Viennese bookshop in the Währing district, now Hartlieb's Books.

Her bestsellers “Meine wundervolle Buchhandlung” and “Weihnachten in der wundervollen Buchhandlung” tell the story of this. DuMont has also published “Wenn es Frühling wird in Wien”, “Sommer in Wien”, “Herbst in Wien”, and “Freunderlwirtschaft”, the first book in the series featuring investigator Alma Oberkofler.

Chief Inspector Alma Oberkofler is actually almost on vacation when she witnesses a car plow into a restaurant at a popular Vienna market. The explosion shortly afterward is devastating. Alma is able to save the kitchen assistant's life, but for the owner Amon Cohen, the journalist Sebastian Schmuck, and a young waitress, any help comes too late. Was it an attack on the restaurant's Jewish owner, the left-wing journalist, or the Ukrainian family living above it – or was it just an accident? And who was that smoker who had been enjoying the sun on a bench in front of the place shortly before? The driver of the car is also dead – and he is by no means an unknown figure in the media: Albert Schotterer belonged to Austria's far-right scene. Time and again he had been discussed as a contender for a key role in a government led by right-wing populists. Alma and her team investigate in every direction – even though, behind her back, politics has already decided the outcome of the inquiry and wants to put the Department of Homicide and Major Crimes out of action.

"Freunderlwirtschaft" is the first title in the Alma Oberkofler-series, followed by "Buberlpartie" (2026).

Leo-Perutz-Price for Viennese Crime Fiction 2025

"An exciting case, an astute look at Austrian politics and characters I immediately fell for. Irresistible!" Melanie Raabe

Unflinchingly good: a crime novel tackling the Austrian elections from bestselling author and bookstore favourite, Petra Hartlieb

Alma Oberkofler's first case: A dead minister, a luxury hotel in Tyrol, and plenty of false friends

"At regular intervals, reality [overtakes] all fiction. You can read it as a classic crime novel, but that almost falls a little short. It's actually a political thriller that shows us in an exaggerated way what is possible in this country. [...] : It's a story of women's empowerment."

Petra Hartlieb, KURIER FREIZEIT

"Petra Hartlieb has no interest in just quickly flashing up a picture of the country's morals, but wants to show in principle what we have already become accustomed to - and also write an exciting thriller." Wolfgang Huber-Lang, APA

Minister Murdered? Fiancée Out of Town? Chancellor Corrupt?

It is Inspector Alma Oberkofler's first week in Vienna and she already has a dead politician on her hands. Max Langwieser: young, conservative, ambitious, Minister of Agriculture and the Chancellor's best friend has cracked his head open on his designer glass table. Fatal accident or murder in style? The case causes quite a stir even in scandal-ridden Austria and gives Alma a headache. Because the only lead, his fiancée Jessica, is - precisely - missing.

Meanwhile, she is sitting in her red mini-convertible and knows only one thing: she has to get away, get away, get away. But she doesn't know how her life could go down the drain so dramatically in just a few days. Nor does she remember exactly why she took Max's laptop in her panic. Luckily, she has watched enough crime series to know how to disappear for a while. She just needs to catch her breath. Maybe she'll come out of this alive after all.

With subtle humour and an unerring eye, Petra Hartlieb looks deep into Austria's political soul and paints a portrait of a squad of young politicians in bespoke suits who think they are invincible - until one of them is brought down.

People Are Always Dying

Glücksburg on the Baltic Sea. On a bright summer night, Anna Schmidt throws herself off the pier into the sea—funeral orator Mads Madsen cannot save her.

Shortly afterwards, her nine-year-old daughter Tilly appears before him. Her mother has left her a final message. Only nobody knows what it says. Mads promises to find out – after all, he is the man of last words. But the deeper he delves into Anna's past, the more inconsistencies he discovers. It soon becomes clear: Anna Schmidt has come too close to a dangerous truth.

Mads does not leave Tilly alone, and he realizes: the two of them are caught up in a game whose rules they do not know – and whose stakes keep getting higher.

Chief Inspector Mills, who normally never shies away from any conflict, cannot help him. The file is sealed; the case is taken away from her.

Supported by his eccentric father and his best friend, a passionate undertaker, Mads continues searching for the truth and for the message Anna left her daughter. Because it is the key to everything.

Mads Madsen Has the Last Word

If you happen to die in Glücksburg an der Ostsee, Mads Madsen gives your eulogy. It's not always an easy task. Lies abound when someone dies. Don't speak ill of the dead, they say, but who was the deceased, really? It often calls for some sleuthing.

One night, Mads receives a mysterious message from the Beyond. His old friend Patrick is dead, and his last wish was to have his eulogy given by Mads. Despite having had no contact with Patrick for years, Mads sets about unearthing clues from the past. He soon realises that Patrick was anything but the nice boy next door. And why did he have to die?

Mads finds himself caught in a web of secrets and lies, one that threatens not just him but those he loves most: his eccentric father Fridtjof, his best friend Fiete, an undertaker who's newly in love, and his loyal Maltese, Bobby. The only person who might be able to help him is the eternally moody Chief Inspector, Luisa Mills, who thinks of him as little more than a tin foil hat conspiracy theorist.

Mads realises the next eulogy he's likely to write will be his own – unless he can pull off one last trick.

Capitaine Roger Blanc has been transferred from Gadet to neighbouring Salon-de-Provence, where he will now primarily be investigating mysterious cold cases. His first case is a murder that took place six years ago: at that time, a family was almost completely wiped out in their car in a remote car park in the Alpilles. A cyclist who appeared to have nothing to do with the other victims also died there. Blanc and his colleagues investigate in Eyguières and Aureille, two picturesque small towns whose residents harbour dark secrets. There is the girlfriend of one of the victims, who gained a child and money as a result of the crime. The old farmer’s wife who feels betrayed. The two pensioners who don’t just visit Provence as tourists. And then there are the dead themselves, who become more and more mysterious the longer the investigation goes on. Little by little, Blanc and his colleagues unravel a web of lies, deceit and illusions. Until they realise what really happened on that hot summer’s day six years ago.

The Beauty of Life

Paula and Peter have been colleagues for a long time. She is a doctor, and he works as a lawyer in the hospital administration. The two of them have always had an eye for one another and, after going away for a multi-day seminar, they find themselves spending the final night together.

They head home, but a strike means they only get as far as Würzburg. They still don't know what they mean to each other, and they have a whole day unexpectedly free – what should they do? They opt to explore the city and its surroundings, cautiously growing closer all the while. Peter struggles with the uncertainty of what the future might hold for them. Paula responds to his urging with a mixture of playfulness and annoyance. She wants to enjoy the moment and prefers to avoid the question of what tomorrow will bring. When a cat decides to tag along with them, they learn from its example how tricky it is for human beings to live in the moment, without a plan, and surrender themselves to a sense of freedom.

"This book, which flits stylistically among heady fairy-tale iconography, a meticulously researched cultural history, and a sendup of high postmodern maximalism, among other modes, reinvents the narrative of the family drama... as a lucent mirror held up to the possibilities of our own. A joyous investment in the power of language to reveal and then transform."

★ KIRKUS REVIEW

„A debut hard to be exceeded (...) A book of superpowers, of superheroines. It comes with a saving grace, (...) This debut could move people like the great confessional texts by Edouard Louis, Annie Ernaux, Daniel Schreiber or Hanya Yanagihara did recently.“
The Jury of the Jürgen Ponto Foundation Literature Prize

„Kim de l'Horizon turns the murmur of body stories into a grandiose novel.“ Paul Jandl, NEUE ZÜRCHER ZEITUNG

“ So powerful ... [a novel] about what it means to be human in a gendered, classist and sexist world.” TLS

This isn't a book about emancipation — this book is emancipation itself

A Book to Shake Perceptions and Certitudes – a Book that Will Change You

The book's unnamed protagonist, who feels neither male nor female, is prompted by their grandmother's slide into dementia to investigate their family history. The more their grandmother forgets, the more the narrator tries to remember: what was it in their childhood that prompted them to feel so alienated from their body? Does it have something to do with the family's hushed-up history of incest? Why is their grandmother struggling to differentiate between herself and her sister who died young? And what happened to their youngest great aunt who disappeared when she was young?

Tracking down answers to these questions proves difficult because the family has a habit of keeping quiet about such matters. At the heart of it all is the question of self-determination: how to exist when your own body is never a given, but is instead constantly having to be negotiated?

Singular in its style and form, Bloodbook deals with our intangible heritage, the things we carry without being asked: stories, genders, identities, trauma, languages, class affiliations. Kim de l'Horizon searches for other kinds of knowledge and traditions, other stories and ways of becoming: feminist, witchy, bought with blood, and those that leave a hole in their wake. De l'Horizon leaves the linear, monotonous form of family stories behind and opts for a fluid, streaming form of writing which softens instead of pinning down.

"What happens to memory once one begins to speak about it, or even write it down – can this really be explored, problematised, and even enriched again and again through literature? Is that even possible after Marcel Proust, Virginia Woolf, William Faulkner [...], after [...]Siri Hustvedt, Annie Ernaux, Karl Ove Knausgård and so many others who have made it the very subject of their work and their lives? The bar here is truly set high, and for that reason the very attempt is already commendable – all the more so for a debut author. We watch Leon Engler [...] doing exactly this and exclaim: Wow!"

Jan Wiele, FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG

"A major discovery in this literary autumn! ... With poetic laconicism and astonishingly dry precision, Engler recounts a family story as unbelievable as it is harrowing. [...] With his 'Botany of Madness', Leon Engler invites us to explore inner landscapes." Jürgen Kanold, SÜDWEST-PRESSE

A young man suffers from a panicky fear of going insane. No wonder, as a stay in a psychiatric hospital is almost normal in his family. In biology class, he learns about heredity. The offspring of titmice are titmice. The offspring of pumpkins are pumpkins. So what are the offspring of his depressive father, his alcoholic mother, his schizophrenic grandfather, and his bipolar grandmother? He makes an initial calculation. Depression: forty percent hereditary. Alcohol dependence: fifty percent hereditary. Bipolar disorder: eighty percent hereditary. The prognosis? One hundred percent bad. He tries to escape: to New York, to Paris, to Vienna. He tries to attack: he becomes a psychologist and works in psychiatry. A Book that Celebrates Love – and Life Itself

Eduard Brünhofer has been happily married to his wife Gina for half an eternity. He has made a name for himself as an author of romance novels, but has since lost the desire to reveal anything about his love. Now he is traveling by train from Vienna to Munich, where he has an unpleasant appointment to attend in this regard.

Sitting diagonally opposite in the train compartment is an early middle-aged woman. At first, Eduard Brünhofer is afraid that he will have to talk to her. Soon he can no longer avoid it. At first he hopes she will get off soon. Then he learns that she is also going to Munich. Catrin Meyr is his chance acquaintance. She tends to talk confidentially, unabashedly asks the most indiscreet questions, doesn't say anything good about long-term relationships, but wants to know everything about them.

In short: she wants to talk about love. And puts Eduard Brünhofer in quite a predicament in the process.

Shortlisted for the Wilhelm Raabe Literature Prize 2024

How do you tell the story of your own life? Judith Kuckart's novel impresses with emotional and linguistic intensity

An auto-fictional novel that captures not only the author's own biography but also the socio-political cornerstones of our time

„This latest book by Judith Kuckart is a playful and thought-provoking fictionalised memoir, which captures both Kuckart's own biography and the socio-political cornerstones of the last sixty years.“

NEW BOOKS IN GERMAN

'Judith Kuckart's book is a wonderful homage to storytelling itself.' Joachim Scholl - DEUTSCHLANDFUNK KULTUR

'A fantastic, unusual book, saturated with poetry and dreams, floating and yet animating.' Jutta Duhm-Heitzmann, WDR 5 Books

"The World Between the News is a novel that opens up paths to one's own memories while reading it. Your own thoughts fit perfectly between the lines of this fragile and soberly formulated life story, which in its wondrous timelessness shows how little external events, as documented in the news, have to do with inner experience. Judith Kuckart gives her readers a fishing rod to fish in their own lives for the memories that also tell of a fulfilled life.' Annemarie Stoltenberg, NDR

Questions to One's Own Life

In her previous books, Judith Kuckart had questions for her semi-fictional characters. Here, however, she moves through her own life. Where do I come from? How did I live? How did I become who I am? Her questions lead to her origins, to the silent catastrophes in her family. She talks about important girlfriends and the men in her life. And finally she asks the question: How do I want to organise the last third of my time?

With a linguistic density that touches the reader, Judith Kuckart tells the story of her biography and thus sheds light on an entire generation, her own.

By talking about herself, Judith Kuckart's novel aims directly at our own lives: Images, smells and sounds emerge from our past and show us what we have experienced between the news.

Hubert Winkels, SÜDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG

“‘Kein Sturm, nur Wetter’ is a multi-layered text, a self-referential system with numerous internal links and cross-references. Judith Kuckart’s novel tells us a story not so much about life than about a life un-lived. About unfulfilled desires, hopes that ran aground, people who seem to live inside a glass jar.” Franziska Wolffheim, DER SPIEGEL

Martina Läubli, NEUE ZÜRCHER ZEITUNG

“With featherlight sentences that banish every touch of pathos, Judith Kuckart sets up one episode after the other before us.”
Matthias Hannemann, FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG

Café der Unsichtbaren / Café of the Invisibles

A Novel, ca. 200 pages

“Judith Kuckart has that rare gift of being able to capture complex truths in a stunningly simple way. Her descriptions of the night shifts are delightfully languorous, interspersed with moments of light and clarity, making the night seem more real than the day. The German cultural setting, and Berlin specifically, are important in the book’s appeal; at the same time, the depiction of loneliness is universal, and the settings are domestic and relatable.” NEW BOOKS IN GERMAN Autumn 2022

SPIEGEL Bestseller

Independent Booksellers' Favourite Novel 2017

"In What You Can See from Here, Mariana Leky has succeeded in writing probably one of the most uplifting books of the year. On every page, there are at least three sentences that you have to underline, copy out or read to someone else." Judith Liere, STERN

"Why should you read a book like this? The answer is simple: because Mariana Leky wrote it, and because her writing will make you drop to your knees. (...) It covers many subjects – friendship and love, courage and despair, habit and change, life and death. But you should read it, above all, to be amazed by Mariana Leky's terrific art of language, over and over again" Katharina Mahrenholtz, NDR

Love in a State of Absence

Selma, an elderly resident of the Westerwald, can foresee death – someone in the village always dies the day after the okapi appears in her dreams. However, the dreams never reveal who is going to die. As you can imagine, the span of time between dream and death exists as a state of emergency for everybody in the village – and in her novel, Mariana Leky describes the fear of the local residents, what they blindly risk, admit, destroy, or bring into order. Yet that is not everything, by far.

'What You Can See From Here' is the portrait of a village and its residents. But above all it is a novel about love in the state of absence, as the various "objects of desire" have a strong tendency to withdraw (or at least, to not respond in a manner acceptable to the other individuals involved).

Kummer aller Art / Sorrow of All Kinds

Fiction, ca. 128 pages
Autumn 2022

#3 SPIEGEL-Bestseller-List

400,000 copies sold

"Mariana Leky is the kind of writer whose books you give away all the time, recommend to the person sitting next to you on the train without being asked, or even want to read to them without being asked. Because her sentences are so beautiful, the thoughts so clever and the comparisons and images so artfully oblique and at the same time appropriate. Because she has mastered the art of seeing the absurdities in the banal. Because the happiness in her books is never kitschy and the unhappiness never pathetic." Judith Liere, ZEIT ONLINE

"Mariana Leky achieves the feat of taking the sorrow of everyday life seriously and at the same time stripping it of its power."
Anne Burgmer, KÖLNER STADTANZEIGER

"Sorrow of All Kinds never fails to put a smile on our faces. These texts are like comforting plasters for soul pain, effective against fears, love trouble or insomnia." Annemarie Stoltenberg, NDR

Mariana Leky studied cultural journalism at the University of Hildesheim after an apprenticeship in the book trade. She lives in Berlin and Cologne. DuMont published the short story collection 'Liebesperlen' (2001), the novels 'Erste Hilfe' (2004), 'Die Herrenausstatterin' (2010) and 'Bis der Arzt kommt. (2013). In 2017, she published the Spiegel bestseller novel 'Was man von hier aus sehen kann' (What you can see from here), which has been translated into over twenty languages and is being filmed for the cinema.

Warm-Hearted, Clever, Subtle, Comforting, Delightful

"Everyone seemed squeaky clean on the inside, only on the inside of us it looked like Hempel's under the sofa," kiosk owner Armin thinks to himself as he tries in vain to meditate successfully. And there is also disorder inside the other characters in these literary columns: Mrs. Wiese can no longer sleep, Mr. Pohl is permanently despondent, Lisa has her first lovesickness, Vadim's hands are trembling, Mrs. Schwerter urgently needs to relax, a sad patient has lost his flock and psychoanalyst Ulrich is messing with transience.

Grief of all kinds plagues the people who manoeuvre through everyday life, sometimes better, sometimes worse. But sorrow also unites them, for example when problems are not solved on walks, but at least come out into the open and into the light.

Clever, humorous and with a great sense of subtlety and absurdity, Mariana Leky portrays the situations of people who do not lack trustworthiness, but rather the courage to realise that, fortunately, one cannot permanently avoid life.

Silja Ukena, KULTUR SPIEGEL

“The light-footed, confident, unpretentious style almost hides at the beginning the serious subject matter the novel is dealing with: ‘Erste Hilfe’ is telling of the unperceptible transition of a latent, still un conspicuous anxiety neurosis to a manifest neurosis.”

“... a book of fairy tales for everyone who in fact really hates fairy tales; a wonderful, effortlessly written and poetically dodgy, surreal novel about loneliness: clever and touching, it makes you laugh and sigh.”

ANDREAS SCHÄFER

Wir Vier / The Four of Us

A Novel, 192 pp., Spring 2010 - Czech, English, French, Italian, Slovene, Spanish sample translation available

"Subtle, poetic and full of insight, "The Four of Us" is high-quality literary fiction and the agony endured by the characters in the book lives in the reader's mind. Devoid of sentimentality, this novel skilfully addresses subject matter that is difficult but of universal interest."

NEW BOOKS IN GERMAN

"The book staggers the reader with an almost unbearable intensity, an intensity, however, that comes about entirely by the revocation, the repression of stylistic means as well as a being stingy with all abundance. This thin linguistic artwork comes sparsely shaded, completely purged, precise and trenchant. And yet it always provides insights into the shimmering mysteries of the human emotional life." DIE WELT

Die Schuhe meines Vaters / My Father's Shoes

Auto-Fiction, 200 pp., Autumn 2022; English and Italian sample translation available

"For My Father's Shoes, Andreas Schäfer chooses a form that has long enjoyed a high reputation in Anglo-Saxon countries (...) - the personal essay. The most outstanding of these attempts transform a personal experience into literary masterpieces in which fundamental conditions of being human emerge, as Joan Didion succeeded in doing in her book of mourning The Year of Magical Thinking and Julian Barnes in his Levels of Life. To come straight to the point: Andreas Schäfer's My Father's Shoes does not have to hide from these books. He succeeds in striking a balance between doubtful, tender homage and liberating inventory. Thanks to the book's highly reflective style, which questions one's own actions, a fate is turned into a general one." Ulrich Rüdenauer, SÜDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG

Das Gartenzimmer / The Garden Room

A Novel, 352 pp., Autumn 2020 - English sample available

"If this book was a house, you'd want to live in it. (...) This is a work in which there are no details, no secondary figures or plot ramifications that remain without meaning. This novel is already convincing as a spatial composition. As a linguistic space it testifies to enormous skill."

Gerhard Matzig, SÜDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG

"Schäfer tells of the disintegration of a family and the ghostly presence of the past in a smooth and sensitive language." Oliver Pfohlmann, TAGESSPIEGEL

Andreas Schäfer was born in Hamburg in 1969, grew up near Frankfurt/Main, and now lives with his family in Berlin. He writes novels, essays, libretti, and radio features. His debut "Auf dem Weg nach Messara" was awarded, among others, the Bremen Literature Promotion Prize. This was followed by the novels "Wir vier" (DuMont 2010), which was nominated for the German Book Prize and awarded the Anna Seghers Prize, "Gesichter" (2013), the Spiegel bestseller "Das Gartenzimmer" (2020), "Die Schuhe meines Vaters" (2022) and most recently "Letzter Akt" (2026).

The Jury of the Harbour Front Literary Festival

"Johanna Sebauer measures out the field between Heimat-novel and Heimat-lessness-novel, between transfigured past and complicated present, between conflicts of self-discovery for some and rebellious self-assertion for others. [...] This excursion into the furthest province of Burgenland is absolutely worthwhile."
Eberhard Falcke, SWR2 LESENSWERT

"Johanna Sebauer [...] tells a wondrous, dreamy fairy tale about the different versions of truth and reality." Cornelius Wüllenkemper,

Johanna Sebauer tells a subtly humorous story about the pitfalls of remembering and the blessing that can lie in forgetting.

An accomplished debut in the tradition of Austrian storytelling

Freedom Lies in Being Forgotten

Nincshof is a small village on the border between Austria and Hungary. Three men from the village call themselves 'Oblivists' and want to escape their hectic world. As far as they're concerned, Nincshof should be forgotten, just as the legends say it was centuries before. Freedom for Nincshof, is their motto, and this goal is worth every effort to them: street signs are dismantled, pages are ripped out of records, gun club or fire brigade club festivals with other villages are ignored. To their great annoyance, a hare-brained act by the hitherto blameless Erna Rohdiebl might attract attention. The old woman absolutely has to be involved, especially since they are convinced that Erna has freedom in her blood. So she is just the right person for the movement. Despite not being entirely convinced by the men's plans, Erna enlists in their subversive campaign, hoping to realise her dreams of experiencing adventure one more time, something that pulls her out of her daily routine. Everything seems to be going according to plan oblivion is within reach - if it weren't for the newcomers from town who are far too interested in Nincshof!

About the Moment of Fighting Back that Changes Everything

Jara stands on an old railway bridge over the river Ruhr, staring into the deep, dark water. Anto was sitting next to her just a moment ago, but now she has jumped into the river and failed to come back up. All Jara can make out from her spot on the bridge is a baseball bat floating stubbornly on the surface; the pair used it the night before to smash a car window.

When Jara first meets Anto, she’s the worst football player on the field, and yet the bravest by far. The pair become friends, and soon their sisterhood evolves into the most important part of their lives: they share lip gloss, cherry cola, and violent fantasies. Every evening, they hatch a new plan; they’ve got the world in their sights and a handle on everything. Until, that is, control begins to slip away from them, piece by piece. Eventually, only one question remains: what to do with all that anger?

Mascha Unterlehberg’s debut novel paints a striking, powerful portrait of a tender friendship forced to contend with pressure from outside and the constant threat of danger – until it’s time to strike back.

Then Tilda is offered a PhD position in Berlin, and her future flashes before her, promising freedom and possibility. But how can she leave Ida alone with their mother? "A novel like a hurricane."

Denis Scheck, ARD DRUCKFRISCH

"Caroline Wahl's absorbing novel tells the story of a young woman coming to terms with the death of her alcoholic mother. (...) Wahl's writing is apparently simple, yet deeply engaging. The prose flows effortlessly, enlivened by frequent passages of dialogue between the characters. Readers are swiftly hooked by Wahl's sympathetic portrayal of a fascinating cast of characters whose lives we cannot help but want to know more about."

NEW BOOKS IN GERMAN

"These are novels that captivate. Wahl has the ability to depict the emotional and mental worlds of her protagonists in language and imagery with such intensity and immediacy that you can't stop reading."

Peer Teuwsen, NEUE ZÜRCHER ZEITUNG

After Her Acclaimed Debut 22 Lengths the New Great Novel by Caroline Wahl

Ida has nothing with her except her mother's old, scuffed hard-sided suitcase, a few favorite clothes and her laptop when she leaves home. It's probably goodbye forever to the small town where she has spent her entire life. Ida is really bad at goodbyes; she didn't even make it to her mother's funeral two months ago. At the train station, she chooses the train that goes the farthest away - and finally lands on Rügen. With no plan, just a big lump of anger, grief and guilt in her stomach, she wanders around the Baltic island. And finally meets Knut, the local pub owner, and his wife Marianne, who take Ida in without further ado.

The three of them have breakfast every morning, Ida then spends the day with Marianne, they walk through the forest together or play cards, and in the evening Ida works with Knut in the Seal. And Ida meets Leif, who is similarly damaged as she is, but maybe they do each other good. Suddenly everything is a little lighter, warmer, more bearable in their lives. But then Ida learns that Marianne is seriously ill, and the pain breaks out again.

Deutscher Krimipreis 2022 (#2)

Stuttgarter Krimipreis 2023

"Oliver Bottini's unagitated, matter-of-fact prose dispenses with sensationalist hysteria, cheap Thrills and, above all, the conspiracy-theoretical certainty that in reality everything happened just so. All this makes 'Once More to Die' an excellent novel."

Thomas Wörtche, DEUTSCHLANDFUNK KULTUR

Five-time German Crime Fiction Award winner Oliver Bottini presents his new spy thriller masterpiece – and it's politically explosive and totally gripping.

Spotlighting Germany's controversial secret service involvement in the Iraq War of 2003, this novel is based on the real-life case of spy and BND source 'Curveball'.

"A novel that is not just telling of murder and manslaughter, but of the emptiness thereafter, of the sense of guilt and loneliness, of entanglement with the past, the personal but also the historical and systemic."

Christine Dössel, SÜDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG

"Oliver Bottini is one of Germany's most important crime writers. But his books are not common crime novels, but highly topical studies of our present time." – DIE ZEIT

“With a magnetic plot and chilling contemporary ring, Bottini’s riveting new crime thriller is reminiscent of Frederick Forsyth’s The Day of the Jackal. (...) The work of a master craftsman.” NEW BOOKS IN GERMAN

“Bottini again manages to convey to us the history of the bloody ‘ethnic cleansings’ in the Balkan that cost the lives of thousands of victims based on a cleverly constructed plot. We have to rethink our narrow-minded view of Yugoslavia’s war of breakup. Truth is always the first victim of war.”

Cologne 1945: following the lynching of an American pilot, a young soldier is forced to face up to his own past

"Rademacher's descriptions of destroyed Cologne have an oppressive density, they are topographically precise, gloomily descriptive, without questionable lyricism." Peter Körte, FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG

"Rademacher effectively contrasts Joe's memories of a summery, bright, pulsating city with the present of 1945." Susanne Schramm, KÖLNISCHE RUNDSCHAU

"Cay Rademacher has written an extremely exciting, cleverly constructed, and thoroughly researched historical novel." Peter Meisenberg, WDR WESTART LESEN

German History at its Most Thrilling

March 1945: US forces have reached Cologne. Despite exhortations from Berlin to hold out, resistance is minimal, and the city seems deserted. Barely 20,000 people remain, living among the rubble. Nevertheless, the Americans only succeed in capturing a portion of the bombed-out metropolis, with the Rhine serving as the frontline for weeks on end. The cathedral city has recently been the target of renewed heavy bombardment. Amid the chaos, a pilot is shot down and parachutes his way into the thick of it – before falling victim to a cowardly lynching.

The job of solving the case falls to a young American soldier, Joe Salmon – real name Joseph Salomon, a Jewish man and Cologne native who narrowly managed to emigrate to the US after Kristallnacht. Joe sets out to find the killer, but he's also secretly on a mission to find two people he had to leave behind when he left: Jakub and Hilda, his best friend and the woman he was hopelessly in love with. Taking a roundabout path, Joe edges closer to cracking the case, as well as solving the puzzle of his own past, and meeting historical figures who lived and worked in Cologne in March of 1945: George Orwell, Konrad Adenauer, Hans Habe, and Irmgard Keun.

"The dialogues sparkle like the crystal glasses on the first-class tables. Because of this, and thanks to Cay Rademacher's talent for making the twenties, the sea and the atmosphere on the ocean liner 'Champollion' sensual to experience, you're really in on the 'Passage to Muscat'."

„Rademacher has written a turgid crime novel, exceedingly trenchant in language and atmosphere. 'The Passage to Muscat' is pure reading pleasure.“

Dazzling characters, dramatic entanglements, and the case of a mysterious crime

Late summer 1929, the last summer of the Roaring Twenties.

No one recognises the signs of the world economic crisis. Luxury and frivolity, jazz and cocaine still determine the rhythm of life - also on the ocean liner Champollion, which sets sail from Marseille for the Orient: Port Said, the Suez Canal, Yemen, Oman ... The illustrious passengers include a scandalous nude dancer from Berlin and a mysterious Roman lawyer, an aristocratic English lady and an only seemingly naive American engineer, a thug from the underworld - and Theodor Jung, traumatised war veteran and photo reporter for the Berliner Illustrierten, Europe's biggest magazine.

He is to do a report on the trip. His wife Dora accompanies him. She comes from the Rosterg family of Hamburg merchants, who are also travelling to Muscat to trade in the fabulous spices of Arabia. Theodor hopes that the adventurous passage will rekindle the passion in their marriage. But Dora's domineering parents and her violent brother despise him, and Bertold Lüttgen, the company's scheming manager, has his own eye on his boss's daughter.

When Dora disappears without a trace after a few days on the Champollion, the voyage becomes a nightmare for Theodor - because not only the Rosterg family, but also the other passengers and crew members claim never to have seen Dora on board.

Saint-Rémy-de-Provence: Picturesque Little Lanes, Ancient Ruins, Southern Sunlight, and the Scent of Lavender. Yet an Abyss Lurks Behind the Idyll.

Cay Rademacher was born in 1965 and his crime novels have been translated into numerous languages, including the Murderer in the Ruins trilogy, set in post-war Hamburg, and the Provence series starring Capitaine Roger Blanc. It's June in Provence and summertime sees tourists flocking to the region – and that includes Saint-Rémy, one of the most beautiful places in Southern France. Just beyond the picturesque little town lie the Alpilles, a mountain range of rugged, rocky peaks and thickly forested valleys, almost devoid of people. And located slap-bang between the town and the mountains, halfway between the hustle and bustle and the solitude of the wilderness, sits the abandoned ancient metropolis of Glanum, the Pompeii of Provence, over one-and-a-half thousand years old. A young archaeologist from the Sorbonne is working among the ruins where he, his boss, and a colleague plan to spend a few weeks carrying out an excavation. So far, so normal – until, that is, the archaeologist is found murdered one night in a gloomy well shaft, a site believed by the Celts, the Greeks, and the Romans, to be a holy place. Blanc and his colleagues Marius Tonon and Fabienne Souillard, both weighed down by problems in their personal lives, take on the investigation and soon discover that the dead man was carrying out much more than just official research. He was searching for something in secret, and it may have cost him his life.
