A man no longer sleeps. With his nerves at breaking point, he fears losing everything: his marriage, his status, his life. His wife Imogen sends him to San Vita, a mysterious luxury resort in the snowy silence of the Dolomites. Under the care of Professor Trinkl, he is told to find himself there. He resists for fear of having to face his innermost self. And rightly so: although Trinkl promises him happiness, he instils in him an unease that is rooted in his childhood. Deeply unsettled, the man flees to his best friend from childhood. And has no idea how far he will have to go to find healing. A surprising novel. Somnambulant and yet wide awake. Between dream and truest reality.

"Freedom, she thinks, doesn't come for free."

Two young female artists of the "Roaring Twenties" who push into male domains

About the architects of the "New Frankfurt" and their visions

Literary Fiction

During his research on the Bauhaus-related city planning programme Neues Frankfurt, the New York art historian Richard Kugelman comes across a photograph of his mother Franziska taken at the end of the 1920s. The photographer is a certain Ella Burmeister. During a trip to the metropolis on the Main, he delves deeper and deeper into her life story - if he were to find more material from this artist, who was forgotten after the war, his planned exhibition would be nothing less than a sensation. But what connected the two women? And why did Franziska never speak of Ella and her time in Frankfurt after she fled to the USA in 1933? Richard eventually gets caught up in a love story that changes his life forever.

Alex is working on an essay. And getting nowhere. The subject: What my mother and I don't talk about. A visit to Alex's highly strung mother in her shabby chic provincial villa is meant to help, but only goes to show that they don't actually talk at all. Not about Alex's queerness, nor about the anti-depressives they both take, nor about the family traumas. When Alex's mother (accidentally!) wounds him at the local Schützenfest, it becomes clear that the essay isn't the only failure in his life.

A superbly laconic novel about the thing that both separates families and binds them together: the words left unsoken.

An extraordinary youth at the foot of the Carpathians

About the experience of reverse migration and a special friendship

An impressive story, told with literary finesse

Literary Fiction

The story of a childhood as a social experiment: in the early 1990s, Judith emigrates from Germany to Romania with her parents. Their destination is a remote village in Transylvania on the edge of the Carpathian Mountains. Judith is to grow up in a pristine community free from capitalism. She explores the place, its people, history and language with a keen eye. She soon becomes the elective granddaughter of the old Transylvanian Saxon Lizitanti. And she meets Irina, who travels with her goat in the milk truck. Irina is a Romni. Judith wants to be one too, but Irina categorically refuses. Soon, the contradiction between the utopia she has brought with her and the reality she has found presents the family with ever greater problems.

Jenny Erpenbeck on Dorothee Riese

"With Dorothee Riese, an author enters the literary stage who succeeds in using the means of language to make tangible what lies behind language. Is being a stranger an insurmountable barrier - even if you share everyday life? What appears to the girl Judith at the beginning as a large, colorful panorama of village life reveals itself more and more as a complex web of relationships in a broken society, charged with violence and hopelessness."

The story of a great friendship and its most difficult test: Georg, Paul and Schubert met on a trip to Italy in the wild 70s and have been the closest of friends ever since. They were and are connected and at times separated by Carolin, with whom all three fell in love and with whom they were together one after the other, Schubert to this day. When Georg's wife dies and he disappears from Vienna, Schubert and Paul set off in search of him - and of their past. A sentimental journey into the realms of friendship and love that leads all the way to Liguria.

Two unusual friends on a journey into life

- Travelling with a bald ibis - the story of a special friendship
- For readers of Carsten Henn and Fredrik Backman

Fiction

It's too hot, the weeds are too lush, and life in general is just an imposition! If a strange bird hadn't suddenly appeared in Matteo's garden on this April day, the old Italian philosopher would still be all alone in the world. But Schopenhauer, as Matteo calls the bald ibis, seems to like him. And stays. Matteo then learns that the bird belongs to a breeding centre on the other side of the Alps. In order to have a little more time together, he decides to cycle Schopenhauer over the mountains himself. The beginning of an incredible journey that changes everything ...

Clever, sociable and very rare - the Northern Bald Ibis, a very special bird

There are only very few of these strange, wonderful, endangered birds left in the world. But for some years now, they have been released back into the wild in Burghausen, Bavaria. As they only lived in zoos for a long time, the birds no longer know the old migration routes to the south. And so the Northern Bald Ibis chicks are reared by humans and transported to Tuscany by microlight aircraft, where they spend the winter before returning over the Alps in spring.

Essen, 1882: The most sought-after bachelor in the Ruhr Valley marries an old maid: for Fritz Krupp and Margarethe, who is the same age, it may be a love match, but high society does not see the bride as a good match. However, Margarethe quickly proves what she is made of. Time and again, she has to stand in for her ailing husband and represent him in private and professional matters. Her husband, the company and the Krupp dynasty demand everything from her - her marriage becomes her life's work, a fulfilment and a challenge at the same time.

"Fritz nodded with relief, while Margarethe shook her head almost imperceptibly. Her husband had internalized the saying 'the wiser man gives in' to such an extent that he was probably the wisest man on the planet."

Who are we when everything is taken from us?

- In the mountains of South Tyrol, three women wrestle with an old guilt
- About the healing power of nature - a novel for readers of Jarka Kubsova and Ewald Arenz

Fiction

In 1943, the young South Tyrolean Lene dreams of a happy future on Elias' farm, the love of her life. She has no idea how grim the fate that awaits her in the harsh mountain world will be. Many decades later, her granddaughter Anna grows apples in this same barren landscape with great dedication and perseverance. When she meets Lis, who is in her mid-fifties and is carrying a heavy debt, she gives her shelter without asking many questions. The women spend a whole year on the farm, constantly changing with the seasons and in harmony with nature. With her gentle manner, Anna enables Lis to open up and heal. Because she, too, knows the burden of someone else's guilt and the damage that silence can cause.

Nicole Wellemin studied in Prague and Munich. She worked in public relations for thirteen years before devoting herself entirely to writing in 2015. In "Late Harvest", she deals with topics that have fascinated her for a long time: the power of the unsaid, the search for meaning and reconciliation. The author got to know and love the South Tyrol region with its impressive mountains as a child.

Nicole Wellemin: Five years ago, you read for the first time about a South Tyrolean who, against all odds, presses single-variety apple juices for high gastronomy at over 1,000 meters. How did this novel come about?

"I remember South Tyrol from my childhood family vacations. Even back then, the Dolomites seemed to me like the border between here and there. A story gradually came together from all the fragments in my head. # A woman's fate in the First World War

Inspired by the author's family history

Historical Novel

Erika grows up on an estate near Danzig and dreams of having her own job, although her mother would prefer to marry her off quickly. When she gets engaged to Axel, the families are reassured. At first, the two have only made a secret pact to buy time. This meant that Axel could study medicine in peace and Erika was allowed to go to the Dresden School of Arts and Crafts. But when the First World War breaks out, all their plans are shattered. And while Axel becomes increasingly sure of his feelings for Erika at the front, she falls in love with another man ...

They were the perfect clique until one of them fell in love with the wrong man. Seventeen-year-old Norah's relationship with David, four years her senior, didn't last long, and after the break-up David became a murderer. He killed a pair of lovers in a remote car park and then died on the run. For the inhabitants of the small town, Norah was from then on just "the killer's girlfriend". Almost twenty years later, Goran, Norah's best friend from childhood, returns to Waldesroda when he learns that Norah is receiving threatening letters that sound as if they come from David, who was thought to be deceased. To find out what is behind this, Goran has to delve into the past. Norah's past, but also his own.

Philosophy

We live in a complex world in which it is easy to lose track of things. Faced with a flood of information, how do we manage to draw the right conclusions, categorise and understand events? Are there insights that are central to a modern, enlightened view of the world - and if so, who produced them? In this book, Michael Schmidt-Salomon presents some of the most important thinkers in history and shows what we can learn from them in order to master the challenges of the 21st century.

Michael Nast has already shared his reflections on life and love with several hundred thousand followers in a series of short videos such as “You have to open up in order to feel”, or “It’s society that needs therapy, not us”. Now his incisive, thought-provoking nuggets of social criticism have been published in book form. Always related to personal experiences, they address the reader on equal terms, for Michael Nast is not a coach, but someone who struggles with himself and his own decisions. With his gift for observation and broad-based knowledge of psychology and philosophy, he opens our eyes and manages to articulate emotions that we all recognise. Wise words that invite us to take a critical look at our own lives.

Germany vs. Germany: an epic encounter

- West versus East – explosive, historic, insightful
- Football as a political magnifying glass

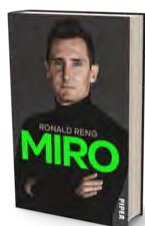

History

There are rare moments in history that act like a magnifying glass. The only football match ever played between East and West Germany was one of those moments: legendary, highly charged and at the same time universal. When the sister states squared up to each other for ninety minutes on 22 June 1974, resulting in a 1:0 victory to the GDR courtesy of Jürgen Sparwasser, fortuity and the mood of the time brought together people and events that affected not just the lives of those involved, but both countries and their respective populations. Ronald Reng's account is uniquely compelling and incisive: an impressive testimony to an everyday piece of pan-German history from a time long before reunification became a reality.

Despite our mental capacity and technological progress, humans have not become any happier over the course of evolution. In everyday life, we often act like animals: unconsciously and irrationally. We prefer to rely on our gut feeling. This is usually a good thing. But how do we manage to react appropriately to the modern demands of the digital world with our Stone Age brains, which have not changed significantly in more than 100,000 years? As a biologist and behavioural scientist, Brensing advocates accepting and respecting the animal in us. Only then will we be able to master the balancing act between the technological and social challenges of our time and our own happiness.

Current Affairs

Arson attacks on synagogues. Agitation in schools. A mob that denies Israel's right to exist: hatred of Jews in Germany.

Following Hamas' terrorist attack on Israel, it is once again clear how little the promise of "never again" applies and how much anti-Semitism has become socially acceptable from various sides.

Renowned journalist Michel Friedman talks about the failure of politics, the ignorance of our society and how we can prevent violence against Jews from spreading further. Because everything is at stake: the future of all of us, freedom and democracy.

Caesar von Hofacker was Stauffenberg's man in Paris. When the bomb exploded in the Führer's headquarters on 20 July 1944, he orchestrated a successful coup in Paris which lasted a few hours, during which the Gestapo and SS were arrested. However, the failure of Operation Valkyrie led to his arrest and execution. His granddaughter, the historian and SPIEGEL bestselling author Valerie Riedesel, traces the courageous and eventful life of the man who went from being a national-conservative Hitler admirer to a resistance fighter.

© Die Hofatografen

Valerie Riedesel Baroness of Eisenbach is the granddaughter of Caesar von Hofacker. She studied history in France and was an editor at the FAZ. She is Chairwoman of the Board of Trustees of the "20 July 1944 Foundation". Today she lives with her family on the island of Rügen.

Overview: What happened on July 20, 1944?

- The aim of the bomb attack in the "Wolf's Lair" was to kill Hitler and then stage a coup d'état.
- At the same time, around 1,200 men from the SS, Gestapo and security service were arrested in Paris.
- The group of resistance fighters around Claus Schenk Graf von Stauffenberg consisted of both civilian and military opposition members.
- After the failure of the assassination attempt, the arrest of the SS in Paris was described as an "exercise". Most of the Paris conspirators escaped with their lives.

Parenting Guide

Renowned parenting expert and paediatrician Herbert Renz-Polster has repeatedly stated that the issue of authority is a sticking point where many parents feel they are not getting anywhere with needs-based parenting. But how can a different, human authority work? In this book, he explains in a well-founded and practical way how mindfulness, respect and co-determination can be combined with clarity, leadership and responsibility, and provides a clear picture of a good childhood, without false beacons and parenting trends.

Barbara Plaschka is a weight loss coach, chewing trainer - and an epicure by profession. This was not always the case. She has also struggled with excess pounds for a long time. She dieted, imposed bans on herself and did extreme sports to compensate. A rather arduous path. Until she realized that there is a completely different way. Because if we chew better, train our sense of taste and work WITH our body instead of AGAINST it, it suddenly becomes very easy. This is how Barbara Plaschka's motto "chewing to be slim" came into being, according to which she now accompanies her clients on their way to a feel-good weight. She shows how we can escape the diet spiral and lead an enjoyable life again, in which a good and healthy body feeling sets in all by itself. And, along the way, explains everything we need to know about our digestion and nutrition in order to feel completely well and fit.

For a good life with fear

- An original and inspiring account of an experience that gives courage
- According to surveys, more and more people are suffering from diffuse anxiety

Psychology

The end of the world looms every morning. Climate, war, catastrophes. Humanity: on the brink. The future: uncertain. What paralyzes people like Mr G. is a great fear. Diffuse, difficult to grasp. It seeps into all areas of life like a poison and takes away all hope. But what if fear no longer had the last word?

This book follows Mr G., a man who, like so many others, struggles with fear and seeks answers: What is this fear and where does it come from? How can it be understood and how can it be overcome?

Thus begins a journey for Mr G. through science and culture in search of the possibility of a good life with fear. In the end, he finds what he is looking for. And if Mr G. can find a way, everyone can.

His cellar is stacked with bottles, he is considered one of Germany's best wine connoisseurs and writes about his love of fermented grape juice in a way that is both well-founded and tongue-in-cheek. He traces the boom in rosé wines and financial excesses in wine consumption. He talks about grape varieties and their advantages, about barrique barrels and screw caps, wine colours and bottle shapes, organic wines, celebrity wines and fashion wines. He talks about which vineyards benefit from climate change and how strange a visit to the world's most renowned winery can be. He reveals how many different wine glasses you should have in your cupboard. And how the flavour of wine changes over the course of a lifetime.
